in fighting in Ireland, he did not refer to the killing of the fourteen British officers, in Dublin, Sunday, preceding the shooting at the game.

"When armed soldiers attack an unarmed populace it is a massacre," Mr. de Valera's statement said. "There is no comparison between the guilt of the British soldiers, who from tanks and armored cars, in full war outfit, with machine guns and rifles mow down unoffending civilians as they walk the streets, and those who kill these British soldiers engaged in an armed campaign of violent aggression against the Irish people's rights.

of violent aggression against the Irish people's rights.

"The conduct of the British troops in firing machine guns on unarmed people attending a football game in Dublin is simply a repetition of the Amritzar massacre in India. Whatever British officer was in charge in Dublin will be commended for it and rewarded as Dyer was. Later, when that officer is made to feel by Irish republicans that, although he may commit these crimes with impunity so far as his Government is concerned, he may not do it with impunity so far as Irishmen can secure it, his death will be classed by the British controlled press as 'another murder by the Sinn Fein.'"

the newly elected Congress together in special session.

The Senator made it clear that the peace making programme rests in the hands of Senator Harding. These two will confer later on the subject, and the outgrowth of this conference may be the introduction of a peace resolution similar to that introduced by Senator Knox (Pa.) last session. This may be done and the resolution passed by the Senate, but it would be known in advance that nothing could come of it, as the President would reverse his whole position on the treaty and league if he approved it. There are in the Senate to convene next month enough Administraconvene next month enough Administra-tion Democrats left to preclude the possibility of a two-thirds vote of the Senate overriding the Presidential veto.
